3.2

From my point of view I think we still share the same believes just in diffrent items, in a modern way. If we see something online and it looks real, we don't go on a dive to see if it truly real. The whole idea of materialism, and ownership, is still a current thing just in diffrent purchases. Insted of buying oil painting for display we purchase, clothes, jewlery, cars and post them on social media. We still aim to show fun, power, luxury similar to the oil paintings. Its also hard not to fall into the pyramid scheme of purchasing or visiable luxury (visable beause truly luxory in my opinon is family, time, and peace, stuff you can't buy) because social media is everywhere, tv ads, Intsagram, billboards ect. Back then upper class was only influenced by upper class, the social libeity idea was only passed on between them. In today's world we can easily loose sight of what we truly want because we are constintly look at what the person next to us has.